

17 Things That Are "Absolutely Worth The Money" In The Long Run, According To People Who Have Them

Sometimes there are things in life where you wonder if they're actually worth spending the extra money on or not. (If you can afford to in this economy, at least! 😊) I came across this thread where Redditor u/Graygigabyte asked, "What's something that's extremely worth the money but no one ever talks about?" Here are some of them.

1. Hiring movers.
2. Good shoes. Bad shoes will trash your whole body.
3. A good dishwasher.
4. Homeowner's insurance.
5. Roth IRA investments. Start early.
6. Regular checkups at the doctor. Many issues are way easier to deal with early on.
7. A massage from a competent masseuse.
8. One of those drain snakes. Man, what a disgusting lifesaver.
9. A good desk chair.

10. A generator for your home in case you lose electricity for a protracted period of time."

11. Therapy.

12. A really quality computer or laptop.

13. High-quality paper products — and I am including feminine hygiene products as well. Good toilet paper, soft paper towels, high-quality tissues with lotion or aloe, pads, and tampons that don't leak. All these items really make life better and more comfortable.

14. A good pair of jeans.

15. TSA Pre-check (if you're a citizen in the US). $85 for five years of shorter and quicker security lines.

16. Having a professional review your resume when you're looking for a job.

17. Furniture. You really gotta spend a lot of money to get yourself something that will last you through the years."
